

Magevale Region

FIELD GUIDE
by Shackleton Drake

The elven village of Myrindel is set deep in the forest along the Bowsong River.

While they harbor no resentment toward outsiders, they sometimes find the locals to be a bit tiring.

With help from the druids of Ildarach, the elves have a productive trade with the dwarves of Ambervein, and jointly supply timber and fresh water to them in exchange for ores and metals.

The Brotherhood of Turas Faen has observed ancient monastic practices and peaceful ruminations for over 800 years, seeking clear thought and offering charitable kindness across all of Magevale.

Ambervein is a dwarven mining settlement built into a towering peak of the Broadcap Mountains. Over the ages, it has become a trade hub that supplies both raw and finished goods to the region. Some say it has been here for almost as long as the mountains themselves.

The Tower of Herikyrr — once a beacon of these lands — fell into ruin after the disappearance of its master.

In the years that followed, several hapless nobles passing through the valley sought to claim the tower for themselves. They were never seen again.

The tower ruins are now shunned by the local populace, and a sinister aura of corruption surrounds the structure.

Wary travelers give it a wide berth, and keep to the road rather than face the perils of the tower and its reportedly haunted woods.
